

How Much Profit?

It would be interesting to know exactly what the active and energetic Republicans who exerted themselves so much last year to elect Garfield think they made by their investment. But for the efforts of Messrs. Conkling, Logan, Cameron, Dorsey, and their associates he would have been overwhelmed and defeated. General Grant threw himself into the breach and filled the chasm by his vast personal prestige. Merchants, bankers, business men, contractors, and clerks gave their money freely to bribe voters and hire repeaters to carry doubtful States by notorious and admitted frauds. Mr. Garfield has been in office a little over two months. He has been President long enough to show his character, to outline his policy, to let the country know what to expect. Do the men who elected him feel satisfied with their bargain to-day?

We put the question in all seriousness for their consideration, not as a taunt. But for the extraordinary and unwarranted exertion made to elect Garfield, General Hancock would have been elected by a large majority. He was the spontaneous choice of the American people. Do the men who resorted to unjustifiable if not corrupt means to defeat him feel proud of their work to-day? How much better off are you, Senator Conkling, now that you have got your man in the White House, than you would have been with Hancock?

How much profit is it to the capitalists, and merchants and bankers to have Garfield in the White House instead of Hancock? Has a single interest of the country been promoted by Garfield's election? What has been gained to offset all the cost and corruption of Garfield's election, and atone for the disgrace that he has brought about?

The situation teaches a lesson which good citizens would do well to heed. Before entering into another campaign in which you are asked to sacrifice your convictions and preferences, and give money to be spent in base and corrupt ways, remember Garfield, and see what you are to gain by the sacrifice. —N. Y. Express.

The Fraudulent Ex-President.

Aside from the infamous means by which Hayes reached the White House, he was a gross personal fraud. In answer to the charge that he saved most of his salary, he recently stated that the aggregate to his credit at the end of four years was $65,000. That statement was false, like others emanating from the same source.

The President may be said to live in public, and the expenditures of the Executive Mansion are an open secret. He receives $50,000 a year for salary. The White House is lighted, heated, furnished and repaired by appropriations. Attached to it are stables, a kitchen garden, and large conservatories, supported by public money. Secretaries, clerks, stationery, steward, and servants, disguised as "messengers" and "ushers," are regularly voted by Congress.

The public receptions which figure so largely in court journals and in snobbish correspondence do not cost the President a cent. Maintenance of his household, and such entertainments as he may choose to give, are the only expenditures he incurs. The former is diminished through supplies drawn from the army commissariat at wholesale rates, and the latter under Hayes exceeded in meanness all previous experience.

In addition to these advantages, there is a contingent fund provided for the President, without any real necessity whatever. It was originally intended to cover accidental items in the Executive office that could not be stated in the estimates. Mr. Lincoln was allowed $1,000 for this purpose. The fund was increased for General Grant, in the sweeping extravagance of that time. But Hayes wanted more, and he begged for larger appropriations, and got them, as follows:

1877.....	$2,500 1878.....	$6,000
1878.....	6,000 1880.....	8,000
Total.....		$22,500

It is believed that most of this money was applied to the expenses of the Hayes family. Before the era of prodigality, the custom was to refurbish the White House generally for an incoming President. Under R. N. rule, in order to provide jobs for favorites, this practice became modified, and of late years "furniture and repairs" are standing items in the appropriations for the Executive Mansion. Hayes received the following sums for furniture, etc.: 1877.....$20,000 1878.....$25,000 1879.....25,000 1880.....20,000

Total.....$90,000

A committee recently visited the White House and reported the furniture as old and worn out, and every visitor familiar with its equipment for years knows that the changes have been few and inextensive since the departure of General Grant. What became of these large sums is a question to be answered by Hayes. "They were not invested in furniture, certainly."

The law fixing the salary of the President does not name a time for its payment. The custom had been to pay at the end of each month. Of course, it could not be properly paid until legally earned. But Hayes demanded his salary on the first of each month, when not a dollar was due to him. The disbursing officer of the Treasury quietly re-monstrated against this unlawful exaction, and then he changed the date of demand to the fifteenth of each month, when the salary for the entire month was required to be paid.

The disbursing clerk was then compelled to commit a felony twelve times a year, or to be removed from office for refusing to obey an Executive order. The poor dependant yielded, and Hayes gained additional interest on his capital by a trick, for which he was entitled to an indictment for conspiring to violate the law and for abusing his trust for personal profit.

Hayes and his family traveled free over the country, and he utilized the Chief Magistracy to become a dead-head from Maine to California. Avaricious and miserly, his first thought was to make money out of the office and to hoard the savings.

Taking all these facts into account, with a knowledge of the parsimony practiced at the White House under Hayes, the best opinion is that he did not expend over $5,000 a year of his salary, if he reached that figure. The

"Contingent fund" and the "furniture"

did the business.

And this is not the worst part of that despicable term of Hayesism. When General Garfield entered the White House on the 4th of March, it was found that the necessary equipment for any ordinary family was wanting. Beyond a decorated and absurd dinner service, purchased at large cost, there was no means of providing for even a few guests until purchases were made. Porcelain, glass, table linen and other household articles had disappeared mysteriously. They are gone, and nobody pretends to know how the house came to be left "without a napkin."

As Hayes has time on his hands, perhaps he may go to Washington and have an inquiry made regarding this delicate matter. Possibly, however, his duties as a member of the Young Men's Christian Association at Fremont, or as a zealous lecturer on temperance, may detain him in Ohio. In that event he can write to Brother Garfield for full information. —N. Y. Sun.

Something Singular.

There is something singular, if not suspicious about the abandonment of the search for the author of the Morey letter. The boasted determination of the Republican National Committee, under the injunction of Mr. Garfield, "to hunt the rascal down," has suddenly yielded to a "want of funds," as if the office-holders could not be assessed as readily for the small amount required for the prosecution of the search as for the immense sums collected from them for campaign purposes. There would be no trouble at all in raising the necessary sum to carry on the investigation if Mr. Jewell, the Chairman of the Republican National Committee, really meant to prosecute the matter in good faith.

The acquittal of Philp, the writer of the article in Truth, sustaining the genuineness of the letter, will go far toward convincing the public that the Republican National Committee never had any good ground for pronouncing the article a forgery. Not a scintilla of testimony has been produced to show that the signature of Mr. Garfield to that letter is not in his own proper handwriting. His own assertion to the contrary, made in the midst of a heated campaign and viewed in the light of his discredited statement in the Credit Mobilier matter, goes for little.

Experts in chirography differ as to whether the signature to the letter is the handwriting of Garfield, but not a few of them, after making careful microscopic examination, have pronounced the autograph genuine. Still the letter may have been forged. It is due to the public that every effort should be made by the Committees representing the two great political parties to discover the fact of the matter. The Democratic National Committee circulated copies of the letter believing it to be genuine. The Republican National Committee made capital of the Democratic Committee's action by denouncing it as the basest of crimes. It is certainly the interest of one, if not both, of these Committees to ascertain the truth, and, having ascertained it, to give it to the public. Some time ago it was reported that Mr. Abram S. Hewitt, of the Democratic National Committee, had proffered Mr. Jewell pecuniary assistance in his efforts to discover the author of the letter. Mr. Barnum would no doubt also lend a helping hand if he did not know that Mr. Jewell has given up the hunt.

Legally considered, the case now stands against the Republican Committee. Their charge of forgery is unsupported by proof and they have not indicted nor even indicated the criminal. On the other hand, the editor who libeled Garfield, if the letter was not genuine, has been acquitted on the charge of criminal libel instituted against him. There is a mystery connected with the matter which must be cleared up if public opinion is to settle down finally against the authenticity of the letter. —Harrisburg (Pa.) Patriot.

Going to Pieces.

The old Republican junk since it has been in command of Captain Garfield has had an exceptionally rough voyage. Head winds, occasionally rising to cyclone, have created big waves. Several distinguished Republican under-officials have been washed overboard; some have been thrown overboard, while others, knowing the rotten condition of the old junk, have abandoned it and are trying to swim ashore. So that Captain Garfield and his First Mate (Blaine) have been unable to take observations, and are now unable to tell the latitude and longitude. Chronometer and compass are out of order. The steering gear is defective, and consternation reigns on deck from bowsprit to tailrail. To make things still worse, Garfield is seasick. Blaine is in command, and, as work is inevitable, symptoms of mutiny have been discovered and the forecastle is ripe for treason. James, in rummaging round for leaks, has struck bilge water in vast quantities, and the sickening effluvia makes the Republican junk a great National stink. Windmills have also struck nastiness in the junk's money chest, and it is now believed the best thing that can be done is to scuttie the junk, and Conkling is engaged in that business. General Butler is likely to come prominently to the front, and if Blaine is not reported disabled, Republicans, Stalwarts and Half-breeds will be disappointed. The people look on as the old Republican junk settles down into her native slime and mud with wonderful complacency. Whether she goes down bow first, stern first or sideways, is not material; she carries down nothing but a cargo of practical plundering, frauds, villains, perjurers, "S. S. routes" and Treasury thieves, and all patriots say, "Let her sink to countless depths of infamy." The days of Republican tribulation have come, sure enough. Deep-seated, deep-rooted, long-nursed villainy is coming to the surface. It is breaking out. The old Republican junk has made her last voyage. She is moving toward warm latitudes where a righteous baptism of fire awaits her coming. —Indiana State Sentinel.

A gardener of Tampa, Fla., out recently a bunch of bananas with ninety fingers. The stalk bearing the bunch was a year old, and grew in his yard. It was of the "dwarf" variety and about four feet high.

The Proper Dinner Hour.

A good deal of attention has lately been attracted by a declaration made in a paper devoted to the study of proper food for man that good health could only be secured by taking a hearty meal at midday. The writer went on to say it was better for business men to take time for a substantial meal at midday than to snatch the hasty lunch that is usual, for the latter proceeding was simply inviting fate. This opinion attracted the attention of some of our morning contemporaries, who seemed to agree with it. Therefore, a Commercial reporter was sent on a tour among well known physicians of this city to ascertain whether it is advisable and healthful for active, pushing men to stop in the midst of their day's work and consume a hearty meal. The majority of those spoken to laughed at the theory thus propounded. An eminent physician living in the upper part of the city said the reason why a heavy midday meal would be injurious, while the evening dinner was really healthy, was that business and professional men were generally in such a hurry in the middle of the day that they could not spare time to masticate the food they ate, much less allow it to digest, before rushing again to their work. He had visited restaurants in the lower part of the city between twelve and one o'clock in the day and had seen respectable men grabbing and swallowing food the same as hogs at a trough. This method of eating was decidedly unhealthy, and it would be far better if they would merely nibble a hard cracker during the middle of the day, for they would have time to masticate that and take a little time over it. It was far healthier, in his opinion, for professional men to dispose of a hearty breakfast, say from seven to eight o'clock in the morning, eat lightly during the middle of the day, then take time for their dinners after their day's labors were over. A dinner at about five or six o'clock, eaten slowly and enjoyed amid pleasant family surroundings, interspersed with cheerful conversation, was more conducive to health than all the midday meals which could be thought of. A heavy midday meal would unfit professional men for carrying on any business in the afternoon, as it would make them heavy and sleepy, for nature requires some kind of repose to aid digestion.

Another well-known physician said the system of eating in this country was ridiculous, as any person of common sense would see. The majority of persons thrust three heavy meals into about ten hours, and leave the body without a fresh supply of food for the remaining fourteen hours of the day and night. He thought two good meals, morning and evening, would be the proper plan, with perhaps a light lunch of crackers at about one o'clock in the day. This would allow both of the heavy meals to digest before the next was taken. As to a heavy midday meal for men who have to tear around as if the next moment were to be their last, it is perfectly ridiculous, as the food, instead of digesting and forming blood, muscle and brain, would act as a block to those forces of nature—choking up a sewer, as it were.

Other physicians expressed similar opinions, the same ideas being given, only in different phrases and modes of expression. —New York Commercial.

Our Faithful Servant.

To pass the very important matter of value entirely, the faithfulness and nobility of the horse claim our respect and kind, considerate treatment at our hands. But it is not improbable that with most of us the consideration of value outweighs every other. Let us treat the subject, therefore, in that light, hoping, however, that the matter of kindness is not foreign to any of us who own horses. At the beginning of the work-life of the horse, most of us commit a serious error. We begin to work our colts too young, or rather begin to work them hard when they are too young. It cannot be expected that a very young animal can as easily perform labor as one that is fully developed. It is very true that the expense of keeping a young horse in idleness, or comparative idleness, is considerable, but the question is, Is it as great as the damage done by working it too early? At four years old the colt is not fully developed; it is still in the process of growth, and to exact of it as much as we would of an older horse would necessarily be detrimental. The animal should be worked lightly, but not to extremes, and if the farmer will adopt the plan of favoring the young horse until it is five or six years old, he will find that he has made money by the operation.

The matter of proper feeding is one of great importance in the treatment of our farm horses, and yet one that some men appear to regard as exceedingly slight. With the vast majority of farmers there is excellent system in feeding, because there are regular hours for going to work and regular hours for quitting work. But this is not universally true, and if there is one thing more reprehensible than another in the management of farm horses, it is the irregularity of feeding. Irregularity of feeding ourselves or our animals will soon show its results. Whether in man or beast, imperfect digestion will soon be the consequence, and an imperfect digestion is a good foundation for all kinds of diseases and a forerunner of permanent disability. No excuse is sufficient to relieve the irregular feeder of the responsibility which rests upon him. The horse should be fed at certain times, and nothing should prevent it. If so fed he will do his work easily, and will remain a good horse, if he was one at the beginning.

Next to regularity is the importance of proper food. Generally the horse is given too much bulky food. He literally stuffs himself with hay, and in such condition the most inexperienced can not help seeing that the animal is very uncomfortable, and that it is an effort for it to move or breathe. The digestive apparatus is overloaded and clogged, and the nervous system is naturally affected. Under such circumstances it is positively dangerous to require of the animal any heavy work or a fast pace. One authority states that at least one-half of the diseases to which the horse is liable are caused "by bad food or good food badly administered." In order to have a farm horse in workable condition, do not overload its stomach with hay, and see to it that he has plenty of grain.

Water regularly also, and provide good, clean water. There is no animal so particular about the quality of the water it drinks as the horse, and while it may be forced to drink impure water, it is an outrage upon the animal's sensibility. Nineteen times out of twenty such compulsion is the result of sheer carelessness or downright indifference of those whose business it is to furnish the horse water, and so becomes about as reprehensible as a human act can be.

In addition to all this, have the harness well fitting and comfortable. Many a horse is driven to fretfulness through an ill-fitting harness, which, perhaps, a few minutes' work would make all right. Some harnesses would fret a stone post. If careful attention is given to such matters as are here mentioned, the horse will be comfortable, healthy, and willing. —Western Rural.

A Wife's Devotion to a Worthless Husband.

The death in Jersey City of Mrs. Sarah M. Hamilton recalls a touching story of wifely devotion. Mrs. Hamilton was connected with a highly respectable family. She was married to Alexander D. Hamilton, whose family connections were equal to her own. Hamilton associated with politicians, and eight or nine years ago was made Treasurer of Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was sent to that country to capture him. Murphy found that Hamilton had placed himself under the protection of Cortina, who was the leader of a powerful band of outlaws. He declared that his protection would last only so long as Hamilton's money, and he patiently waited in Mexico till the outlaws should turn the fugitive out from among them penniless. He did not have to wait many weeks. Cortina robbed his ward of all he had and then abandoned him. Murphy brought him back to Jersey City. He had been in office a trifle less than three years when he fled, and it was discovered that he had stolen $80,000 worth of city bonds. He was tracked through the country until he was finally ascertained to be in Mexico. Police Sergeant, now Chief Benjamin Murphy, was